

PROJECT SHOW CASE: TROPICAL ISLANDS

The project demands the construction of spa, leisure and entertainment worlds embedded in a lush tropical rainforest setting. The individual spa installations are situated in various buildings that all have their respective themes. The entire spa area is covered by the green roof of a tropical rainforest.

The central area is themed Jungle Village and includes a floral steam bath, herbal sauna, tree sauna and a great variety of multi-sensory showers. Elephanta Temple which is originally situated on an Indian island opposite to Mumbai is another highlight of the spa. It includes two Ayurveda treatment rooms and a spacious crystal steam room with rose quartz, rock crystal and amethyst as well as various showers for cooling-down.

The Asian relaxation area features dimmed light and background music for meditation. This is the perfect setting for total relaxation.

Next to the Asian pavilion the visitors will find a replica of Ta Phrom, one of the temples at Angkor Wat, Cambodia. We replicated the part of the temple that features the rudiments of the strangler fig. Here we installed an earth sauna, various multi-sensory showers and a spoon-drift corridor.

The Sicilian Alcantara Canyon is a landscape of black basaltic stone and has been reconstructed at Tropical Islands true to the original. Visitors can enjoy total relaxation in the healing earth bath and in the salt grotto. The combination of Himalayan salt stones and a rise of temperature create a briny atmosphere which has a healing effect on the body.

At the Sea Shell Restaurant visitors can choose from a wide range of international delicacies.

Challenge

We were facing the construction of an entire jungle village and the surrounding jungle in a 66,000 m<sup>2</sup> hall within a construction period of merely three months while operations were running. The assembly was partly carried out twenty-four-seven with only one access available. So all components had to be directly assembled and the storage space was minimal.
